

SUMMER ESCAPES

Zurich, Seductive City without even trying

"Everything I wanted to see or do was within walking distance: I could drink the best coffee by day, see non-dubbed English films in the afternoon, and sit quietly in a perfect Italian restaurant in the Kreis Vier district in the evening and watch smart-looking couples pull up in their muscular Audis...

You can tell a lot about a town by the cars that circulate through its streets, and Zurich is firmly an Audi town.

Just as the brand is discreet, confident, and a little sporty, the same can be said for the city: Zurich doesn't reveal or share its secrets readily, there's a bit of self-satisfaction that can veer close to arrogance, and the 90-minute drive up to the Alps makes most locals more sportif than average.

For both visitors and residents, the city makes entertaining incredibly easy. New York, Paris, and London have increasingly become obsessed with guest lists, knowing the doorman, and planning everything in advance; Zurich is a place where you can decide to have a night out after you've folded your napkin at 10:30 P.M. All over various districts of the city, bars stay open late, are populated by handsome people, and don't require customers to endure attitude from a jumped-up kid with a clipboard and earpiece."

"Summer is the best time to visit my city because Zurich comes to life to celebrate it. Join the locals for a dip in the lake or the Limmat River, a barbecue at one of the many green areas the city offers, or a drink at one of the badis, open-air bathing areas that become bars at night."
